Using 3-D printing to help clean NYC streets

Innovative. Urban Hubs are trying to change the way that the world recycles.

If you've taken the L train to Brooklyn recently, you may have spotted clusters of bright, honeycomb-like containers attached to signposts. Each unit is sized to hold an empty can or bottle. These mini recycling bins, called Urban Hubs, are part of a Bushwick-based project created by the 3-D printing startup TCR3D that is taking hold of cities around the globe.

Urban Hubs were not just designed for ecological or environmental purposes. The contraption also serves to help "canners" collect discarded bottles and cans, which they then redeem for cash in order to make a living. "This happens every day," Daniel Figur, TCR3D co-founder and creative director, said, gesturing to an overflowing garbage can on the sidewalk of Jefferson Street.

It allows canners easier access to the bottles, while preventing trash from littering the city's streets. The creators of Urban Hubs partnered with "Sure We Can," a co-op for canners to create a product suited to the canning community's needs.

Urban Hubs is sponsored by the 3-D printing company 3DSystems,

TCR3D CEO Nate Kolbeck puts a bottle in an Urban Hubs cluster near his studio. / MILES DIXON, METRO

Spreading movement

The Urban Hubs movement is spreading around the globe.

- It takes the current generation of 3-D printers about seven hours to create each individual bin, but only about $8 in plastic filament.

- So far, Urban Hubs have popped up in Italy, Japan, Canada and Ukraine, in about a thousand international downloads.

Visit Metro.us for five things that you didn't know about 3-D printing.

whose printers they use to generate the hubs.

"3-D printing helps raise awareness because it's so novel and fresh and cool, so when people see something related to 3-D printing they want to participate in what's happening, and in this case it's recycling," Nate Kolbeck, co-founder and CEO of TCR3D, said.

The founders stress Urban Hubs are an open source idea — their blueprint is available for free online, and they encourage others to make their own Urban Hubs. Kolbeck and Figur are enthusiastic about the rise of 3-D printing, and predict that Urban Hubs will pick up momentum as 3-D printing becomes more widespread.

Since the product's release, one user has posted a photo online of himself using Urban Hubs as cup holders for his car. The team is also looking forward to seeing what the kids at P.S. 123 in Brooklyn make of Urban Hubs, with whom they are partnering to design a curriculum with their invention.

At the end of the day, Figur and Kolbeck hope their creation will outlast its original purpose as a recycling bin. "I hope there is no need for recycle bins in the future because people start using reusable bottles," Kolbeck said. "That would be awesome if there was no need for this."

Damage. City settles OWS protestors suit

City attorneys agreed to pay up to $583,000 in damages to settle a lawsuit alleging NYPD officers wrongfully arrested protestors at a 2012 Occupy Wall Street rally.

The protestors lawyers hailed the settlement.

Frick proposes expansion, renovation

The Frick Collection's second floor may soon open to the public for the first time.

A renovation and expansion proposal announced Tuesday includes construction of a new six-story wing on the museum's East 70th Street side that would increase exhibition space, add a rooftop garden and open up private upstairs rooms.

"Since the Frick Collection opened as a museum nearly 80 years ago, we have been guided by Henry Clay Frick's mandate that his home and exquisite collection offer inspiration and enjoyment to the public," museum director Ian Wardropper said in a statement.

Construction would begin in 2017 and could

Court approves the 'Taxi of Tomorrow'

New York City's plan to create a uniform taxi fleet with cabs from Nissan Motor Co. won approval from a state appeals court on Tuesday, which overturned a lower court ruling that struck down the initiative.

The "Taxi of Tomorrow"

Taxi of Tomorrow / GETTY IMAGES

initiative, developed by the New York City Taxi and Limousine Commission, is "a legally appropriate response to the agency's statutory obligation to produce a 21st century taxicab consistent with the broad interests ... that the agency is charged with protecting," Justice David Saxe wrote for a 3-1 majority for the court.

In 2011, Nissan won a contract worth $1 billion to provide its Nissan NV200 cabs, only to have a state Supreme Court justice rule last October that the TLC overstepped its authority. The plan was challenged by Evgeny Freidman, city fleet operator, and the Greater New York Taxi Association, which claimed the commission could not force taxi operators to buy specific vehicles. REUTERS

Average number of people a day arrested for low-level marijuana possession in the first four months of 2014, according to a Marijuana Arrest Research Project report.

Marijuana arrest patterns during the first months of the de Blasio administration are "indistinguishable" from his predecessor, according to a recent report.

An average of 80 people were arrested daily during the first four months of 2014 for possessing small amounts of marijuana, a report by the Marijuana Arrest Research Project found. An average of 78 such arrests were made in all of 2013.

As a candidate, Mayor Bill de Blasio pledged to work with the NYPD to reduce low-level marijuana arrests.

"We're deeply disappointed that a promise

Mayor de Blasio made has not been fulfilled," said Loren Siegel of the research project, which cites statistics from the New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services for the report.

NYPD arrest statistics provided by the mayor's office show a slight discrepancy from the report, but those numbers still amount to an average of 79 daily arrests in the first four months of 2014. According to the city, an average of 85 arrests were made a day during the same time in 2013.

Symbol. New York one step closer to having an official amphibian

New York is a hop, skip and jump from adopting an official state amphibian.

The wood frog is another step closer to being named New York's official state amphibian after the State Senate passed a bill on Tuesday sponsored by the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Sen. John DeFrancisco. The bill will have to be approved by the assembly before it can be signed into law by the governor.

In an interview earlier this year, DeFrancisco said the idea came from a 4th-grade class in his district which wrote letters to his office questioning the absence of a state amphibian.

The wood frog is found all over New York. It's average length is 1 1/2 inches long with orange or dark brown skin. The male distinguishes itself with a quack rather than a croak.

Some state mascots

New York has many official symbols that represent the state.

1 In 1987, the apple muffin was chosen as the state muffin.

2 One year later, the state picked an official shell, the bay scallop.

Law. Firms flock to gay-marriage proponents, shun the other side

As U.S. lawsuits seeking gay-marriage rights move toward a likely showdown at the Supreme Court next year, major law firms are rushing to get involved — but only on the side of the proponents.

A Reuters review of more than 100 court filings during the past year shows that at least 30 of the country's largest firms are representing challengers to state laws banning same-sex marriage. Not a single member of the Am Law 200, a commonly

OMG! Ancestors' flying fists shaped our faces

Human faces might have been shaped by violent fist fights, according to research at the University of Utah, which deals a heavy blow to prior research that showed changes in bone structure were the result of the dietary need to crush hard foods. Lead researcher David Carrier explains to Metro why

What were our ancestors fighting about?

Lohan living it up in London (soberly)

Lindsay Lohan may be making a scene in London partying late every night, but she's still in great shape sobriety-wise, a source close to the troubled actress insists — despite the fact that Lohan hasn't been entirely sober lately. "Lindsay was off the wagon. Everyone has their stumbles, everyone will go out to drink," the source explains. "She fell off the horse, but she picked herself back up and got back on. It's a struggle. Just because you have a hiccup doesn't mean you have to hold your breath." And even with this hiccup, there's still reason to be optimistic. "Lindsay's in clubs, but she's not drinking. Her friends have never seen her doing so well," the source says. "Lindsay goes to the gym every single day. She's really trying to stay sober. And she's taking it one day at a time."

What happened to our beloved Hugh Jackman's hair? Just this weekend he was looking mighty fine in all of his hirsute glory while hosting the Tony Awards. And now this photo appears on Instagram? Reportedly, Jackman did not do this as a result of a fit of mania ala Britney Spears. And although he looks a little like one of those toys where you magnetically move hair around the face of a bald man, the new look is for the role of Blackbeard he's going to play in an upcoming movie called "Pan."

J.Lo will do the World Cup after all

It turns out Jennifer Lopez will be helping kick off the World Cup after all, despite her reps telling CNN over the weekend that she wouldn't perform as planned during the Opening Ceremony in Brazil. "The backlash was so significant that she decided she needed to attend," a source tells the National Enquirer. So what caused her to pull out in the first place? It was all about the money. "[Lopez] was in a back-and-forth with the World Cup about expenses," the source says. "She had wanted them to cover everything for her, from private transportation to her hotel and the costs associated for her entire entourage." But apparently there are other things more important than money (when you're rich, anyway): "It's the world stage. It would have been foolish for her not to exploit the World Cup for the publicity alone."

Heeeey, you guyyys, a 'Goonies' sequel may happen

Good news for fans hoping Richard Donner's plans for a "Goonies" sequel pan out. Sean Astin, who starred in the original, is totally onboard, and so is Corey Feldman — if anybody wants them. "My first thought when Dick said he was doing that was like, 'All right, maybe this time it's true,'" Astin tells E! News. "I certainly like the idea of doing it."

As for Feldman? "We talk a lot; Corey and I are buddies," Astin says. "He's fired up. He's ready to go."

'Life sucks sometimes'

Laura Dern plays the mom of a cancer patient (Shailene Woodley) in "The Fault in Our Stars." GETTY IMAGES

Interview. Laura Dern talks about the joys of being in the sometimes dark "The Fault in Our Stars."

Laura Dern is used to taking on serious roles, but morphing into a character whose daughter is dying of cancer is emotional on a whole new level. But when "The Fault in Our Stars" director Josh Boone offered the part of Franny to Dern — a role she didn't even audition for — she jumped at the chance.

"I read John Green's book [on which the movie is based] and just fell in love with it and what this movie could mean for all people, philosophically, who are fearless enough to love even though a love may end," she explains. "I'm really happy to be a part of it."

"The Fault in Our Stars" is about a teen with terminal cancer named Hazel (Shailene Woodley) who falls in love with Gus (Ansel Elgort), who is in her cancer support group. Their love is as sweet as teenage love can be, except for the fact that it is destined to be unfairly short-lived.

For Dern, it was author John Green who helped her carry the heavy weight of her role as Hazel's mom. "He was there to hug us and thank us each day, which I can't imagine another author doing. His love of us made us fiercely protective of him and the book and it was an amazing, joyful experience. We would have dinners together as a cast every single night and laugh so much. That really carried me through," she says.

She also had long talks with Green about her character and the inspiration behind her. "He's definitely known parents going through something similar and there are specific parents that I think meant the world to him. He would tell me about how he's seen how extraordinarily tireless a mother can be while she is trying to normalize her daughter's diagnosis so she can have a regular teenage day. ... It's just unimaginable, and yet there are so many people going through it."

The mother-daughter relationship in the movie is its own love story, as strong as the romantic one between the two cancer-struck teens. Naturally, a strong bond carried over in real life between Dern and Woodley. They both have similar outlooks on life, a bit hippyish in a way, and while filming they spent their off-time cooking healthy meals and going to yoga classes together. "We're best friends now," Dern says.

What it taught her

The upside

Though filming ended last year, Dern says her life is forever changed by playing Franny.

"It absolutely was such an incredible gift in my life to be grateful for these small blessings each day and really try to remain in the moment and not be overwhelmed by the fear and pain that one will go through in life, for whatever one's life traumas are," she says. "Life sucks sometimes and it's inescapable. This is a movie about how to navigate that."

Art with 'Subtlety'

Arts. Check out the last installation that will take place at the Domino Sugar Factory.

Kara Walker is best known for her black stencils of antebellum scenes that critique Civil War-era ethics. But she just created her first large-scale project in Williamsburg's 90,000-square-foot Domino Sugar Factory.

Ripe with gallows humor, "A Subtlety: or the Marvelous Sugar Baby" tackles the powerful topic of race politics. The installation is an homage to the unpaid and overworked laborers who refined sugar in the factory from its conception in 1856 to its closure in 2004.

At times taboo and sexually charged, this provocative installation investigates the history of the Domino Sugar Factory through age-old racial tropes. The installation is a 35-foot-tall, 75-foot-long sphinx surrounded by child attendants — and it's all created from sugar and molasses.

A combination of racist stereotypes of black women, the head is a kerchief-wearing "Mammy," whose jolly persona lived to please the domestic needs of wealthy white families. Her body is the erogenous

"Jezebel" with her prominent breasts, buttocks and sexuality on display. With sullen faces, the molasses-covered attendants recall the historical socioeconomic gap between white and black culture. To give scale to the gargantuan installation, the children are the height of an average adult.

This exhibit is the last before the factory's demolition. In March 2014, the City Planning Commission approved a $1.5 billion redevelopment to connect the neighborhood to the waterfront and create a modern Brooklyn skyline.

Kid's room. Create a room that has as much personality as your little munchkin.

When it comes to bedrooms, the conventional design wisdom is "less is more": neutral walls, tranquil bedding, maybe a tasteful zen rock garden if you insist on expressing yourself.

But kids don't need to escape to a Restoration Hardware-induced coma — they need imaginative, exciting spaces to dream, play and create. We hit up Pennsylvania-based interior designer and illustrator Lou Marshall for kid-friendly decor tips.

The five-year plan

Before you commission that "Frozen" mural, think about what your aspiring princess will be aspiring to next year. "I want a room to grow with a child, to last a good five or six years," says Marshall. If your little one is obsessed with a certain Disney character right now, consider buying the bedding, but go less-specific with bigger investments such as wallpaper and rugs.

The golden rule

Ultimately, designing a child's bedroom isn't (or shouldn't be) that much different from designing your own. "Above all else," says Marshall, "think about when you're going to sleep: What would you want to be around and look at before you close your eyes?"

LIGHT UP THEIR ROOMS

Help your kids have bright, fun rooms with these easy tips. / FUSE

Painting

Softer colors are more sleep-friendly. / FUSE

Color theory

Kids' worlds are colorful, and their rooms should be, too. That said, Marshall recommends staying away from harsher primary colors and keeping things light and bright (sleep is the end-game, after all). Swap the hot pink for a softer cotton-candy hue, the bright blue for a chalkier version and dark greens for a cheery apple shade.

Be thrifty

Cheap trick

For quick, cheap art, Marshall recommends perusing the party store's wrapping paper section. Bright, cheery and frequently starring the latest princesses and trendiest robots, it's perfect for framing and will only set you back around $3.

Express yourself

Spark imaginations

"I like to inspire kids to play and create rooms they can play with," says Marshall, who paints interactive eye-level murals (check them out at loulous-whimsicals.com). "If they're sent to their room, I want them to be happy about it." No art skills? No problem. A foolproof, inexpensive coat of chalkboard or magnetic paint turns any wall into a canvas.

Penthouse. Nassef Sawiris just wrote a very big check.

Edgar Bronfman's 960 Fifth Ave. penthouse is not only staying in the billionaire's club, but has also broken a record for the most expensive co-op ever sold in New York City. The home, which was originally listed for $65 million and entered contract for $70 million, sold to Egyptian billionaire Nassef Sawiris for that exact contract price, according to records filed today.

The deal officially tops music mogul David Geffen's 785 Fifth Ave. penthouse buy in 2012 for $54 million. The news was first reported by the New York Daily News.

Sawiris, who heads Orascom Construction Industries, Egypt's most valuable publicly traded company, is the 193rd richest person in the world, with a net worth of $7 billion, according to Forbes.

Walmart heiress Alice Walton was initially rumored to be the buyer.

Brown Harris Stevens' Mary Rutherford, Leslie Coleman and Alina Pedrosos listed the apartment at $65 million in February. The brokers couldn't

NYU growth blocked by condo board

Building dispute.

At issue is the university's right to punch a hole in a wall.

New York University's plans to connect its Upper East Side fine arts institute with a donated space in a neighboring building appear to have been quashed by that building's condo board, which claims the university's plans require the board's consent.

The institute operates from a 40,000-square-foot space at 1 E. 78th St. NYU hoped to gain more room by connecting the building to a neighboring six-story, 13-unit building at 3 E. 78th St. via a 10-foot-long breezeway. Billionaire Sheldon Solow donated the ground floor commercial condominium in the building to NYU in the late 1990s. Building the breezeway would require NYU to punch a hole in the French Gothic property, designed in 1899 by renowned American architect C.P.H. Gilbert.

But Adam Leitman Bailey, the lawyer for the condo board at 3 E. 78th, wrote to the LPC last month, stating that the wall in question is owned by the condo board, and represents a structural change to the building. That would require approval by the condo board president, per the building's bylaws.

NYU maintains the bylaws allow the owner of the commercial ground floor condominium to make alterations without the board's consent, according to The New York Times.

Bailey claims NYU falsely represented itself in the application as owners of 3 E. 78th St. to secure approval of the work. "In light of NYU's knowing and deceptive submission of this unauthorized application, the Board respectfully requests that the application be rejected in all respects," he wrote to the LPC.

As part of the landmarks process, university representatives initially appeared before the area's Community Board 8 in May to present the plans.

The community board voted 41-1 against NYU's proposal. "The presentation information did not fully illustrate the proposed changes," the board stated in a letter to the LPC dated May 22. The letter notes "the materials are not appropriate to the existing buildings" and the construction would disturb "the original fabric" of the two buildings.

The Times stated that NYU temporarily suspended its application after it was rejected by the board. But it was the Landmarks commission that withdrew the application, until NYU and the condo board agree about the right person to sign the application, according to correspondence between the LPC and the condo board. HITEN SAMTANI

Impact on residents?

New York University wants to use the space at 3 E. 78th St. to build additional facilities. NYU spokeswoman Shonna Keogan told us that the university shared these plans with building residents over a year ago.

"The addition of the breezeway was included in large part to reduce the traffic in the main entrance in order to minimize impact to the condo residents," she said.

E3 UNVEILED THE GAMES YOU'LL BE PLAYING

Every year a bunch of drunken digital elves turn Los Angeles into a gamer's paradise, where the games and consoles of the future are unveiled, usually by dorky dudes wearing suits. Here's what went down!

Sony

The PlayStation 4 has shipped gobs of units, taking an early lead in what is referred to by industry insiders as the “console wars.” They could have rested on their laurels, but Sony used E3 to go heavy on even more games, like the brutal “Bloodborne,” which is set in a bizarre London, and the absolutely stunning “No Man’s Sky,” which allows you to explore space — forever. They also announced the new sci-fi franchise starter “Destiny.” Also, there’s going to be a white PS4.

hasn't exactly stayed on message. They delivered with scores of game announcements, from a new "Crackdown" (yes!) to a "Halo" HD collection, not to mention new installments in the "Tombs Raider" franchise. The only downside? Most of these games were teased with cinematic trailers. Little-to-no gameplay was actually shown.

Nintendo

Nintendo's presence at E3 offered some surprises, sure, but for my money the star of the show was the forthcoming duo of "Super Smash Bros." games launching for Wii U and 3DS. If the recent success of "Mario Kart 8" is any indication, games that allow friends to crowd around the couch and beat the crap out of one another rule the world.

Microsoft

Microsoft came into this E3 with something to prove. Xbox One isn't the runaway success of its predecessor and the brand

Porn might affect your brain

Location of study: Germany
Study subjects: 64 men

Results: Watching excessive amounts of pornography may be linked to brain changes in men. In a recent study, men who said they watched significant amounts of porn were found to have decreased brain matter and less brain activity. Significance: Researchers say the findings might be taken as evidence that the neural response to sexual stimuli is blunted with more frequent exposure. But the study was unable to determine whether the pornography caused the observed neural effects, or if the specific biology dictated the preference for pornography.

Researchers regrow teeth

Location of study: U.S.
Study subjects: Rodents

Results: A novel procedure has uncovered a potential new way to treat damaged teeth – by growing new ones. Researchers are using low-level lasers to stimulate stem cells that regenerate dentin, which serves as the foundation of teeth. Significance: In general, the process of regenerating stem cells isn't so simple. "I think the big novelty is connecting the dots here in our ability to use a noninvasive tool and perform clinical therapy driving stem cell differentiation," said lead author Praveen Arany.

The ability to regrow teeth should not replace taking care of the ones you have now! / DIGITAL VISION

Many feel less stress at work than at home

Location of study: U.S.
Study subjects: Over 100 working Americans

Results: Stressed out? Cutting back at work might not be the best remedy. New research suggests we might be more stressed at home than at the office. Cortisol, the "stress hormone," was generally found to be higher while we're home. Significance: Sarah Damaske of Penn State University says the findings held true across gender, marital status, occupation and education. Focusing on work tasks and successfully completing them could be good for you, she said.

IS IT JUST SUMMER OR SOMETHING MORE?

Sometimes, sweating is due to more than just warmer weather.

The Doctor Will See You Now

DR. MARK MELROSE

URGENTCAREMANHATTAN.COM

Mark Melrose, DO, is a board-certified emergency physician at Urgent Care Manhattan. E-mail him your questions at askdrmark@metro.us.

I sometimes arrive at work drenched in sweat. How do I know if I sweat too much?

feet, armpits and groin, whereas sweating for cooling purposes occurs all over the body.

Perspiration, or sweat, is the body's way of cooling itself by evaporation of a slightly salty, water-based fluid secreted from glands in the skin. The amount you perspire depends on how many sweat glands you have; women have more than men, but men's sweat glands are more active.

Sweating is usually a response to higher ambient temperatures. When it is hot outside, you sweat more! Increased humidity also makes it feel as if you are sweating more; when there is more moisture in the air, there is less evaporation from the skin.

Sweating is an involuntary response to the environment or other factors, such as diet (caffeine, spicy foods, alcohol), anxiety and stress, pain, low blood sugar, hormonal fluctuations and fever from an infection. Emotional stress often causes sweating that is isolated to the palms,

The fluid secreted by sweat glands is largely water with a low concentration of electrolytes, minerals and fatty acids. On a particularly hot day or in response to vigorous exercise, the body can lose up to 2 liters of fluid per hour, so stay hydrated! Excessive sweating (hyperhidrosis) might be caused by a number of medical conditions, including nervous system disorders, infections, hormonal imbalances, medication side effects and anxiety. Though there's no baseline for how much sweat is too much, there could be a concern if you're sweating for no apparent reason. If you suspect that you sweat more than is appropriate due to weather or exercise or at inappropriate times, then a doctor can conduct a purposeful history and physical exam.

♊ Gemini | May 22-June 20. This is not the day to make promises. You'll be confused regarding what's expected of you. Get clear instructions.

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22. An indirect proposal will prove intriguing. Follow your instincts, and get the particulars from someone knowledgeable.

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22. Make sure that the attention you give doesn't cause a problem with a friend or loved one. An innocent gesture will lead to an unsettling disagreement.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22. Trouble is brewing behind the scenes: If you are doubtful regarding a person's intentions, refuse to get involved.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22. Join an organization that appreciates what you have to offer. A partnership will develop from a mutual desire to get involved in a worthy cause.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21. You will end up in a worse predicament if you hand your hard-earned cash to a schemer. Offer advice, not money.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21. Make sure your feelings are reciprocated before making any romantic announcements. It's likely that your love interest isn't ready.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20. Conceal your plans. Someone is likely to take credit if you are too open. Listen, and you will discover ulterior motives.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18. Join forces with someone who can help you achieve your goals. Having a partner will cut your workload in half.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20. Speak up, or someone will expect you to be a follower. Make it known that you intend to forge your own path.

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21. Now is the time to invest, not spend. Sound economic advice will enable you to add to your finances. Put quality over quantity. BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Fisher pushes aside inexperience issues

NBA. The new Knicks head coach was introduced to the media Tuesday.

The Knicks officially announced the hiring of Derek Fisher as the franchise's 26th head coach on Tuesday. And perhaps no coach has had his credentials as scrutinized as the former NBA point guard.

But the always affable Fisher, once the NBA players association president, quickly dispelled the notion he's not up for the immediate career change.

"There obviously will be a lot of talk about my inexperience as a head coach, and that is factually true," said the 39-year-old Fisher. "I have not been a head coach in the NBA, college or high school, but I am experienced. Basketball is a game that I am experienced in playing, in its understanding, leading, guiding and helping a group of people achieve the greatest gift in the world as a professional athlete, and that's being a champion. That I am experienced in and that is something that I plan on sharing with these players and this organization."

Fisher said he believes he's been grooming himself since he was in elementary school.

"I've very rarely been the best player, most talented, the tallest, the highest jumper or the best shooter on my basketball team, so right away I immediately had to start thinking how the game was played," Fisher said.

Melo out?

Fisher to talk to Anthony about return

Derek Fisher's opening press conference as head coach would not have been complete without addressing the biggest topic on the Knicks hands — likely free-agent-to-be Carmelo Anthony.

"As far as Carmelo, we feel he's one of the top players in the world and we want him to be here, but ultimately it's his choice," Fisher said. "He's never been a free agent, so perhaps he wants to go through that process."

Q&A: Nico Calabria, one leg but lots of skill

Soccer. Metro spoke to the American who won't be kept off the pitch.

Nico Calabria is a first-class soccer player, capable of scoring from distance and running off to celebrate after scoring with an amazing bicycle kick. But Calabria's ability is even more remarkable, knowing the amateur has just one leg and plays against able-bodied opponents.

Metro spoke to Calabria, who will be playing for Team USA in the Amputee Football World Cup in Mexico later this year.

How do you hone your abilities in soccer?

I decided to focus on my strengths. Speed and agility will never be my strong points in football, so I focused on controlling my touch, passing, vision and creativity.

What are your dreams?

My life plans are to become a motivational speaker and a teacher. I also hope to have time to train as much in [soccer] and wrestling.

Who are your favorite players that will be in the World Cup?

I admire some skills in several players. I think [Andres] Iniesta has a very creative view of the field. Others are [Lionel] Messi, Cristiano [Ronaldo] and Neymar.

If you could describe your life philosophy in a few words, what would it be?

Everyone has the power to challenge the expectations.

Rangers fight uphill battle in Cup Final

Rangers head coach Alain Vigneault couldn't mask his anger Tuesday when asked about his team's mood one day before facing elimination in the Stanley Cup Final.

"We're down 3-0," Vigneault said. "We're all lacking sleep. This is tough. I didn't expect my players today to be cheery and upbeat. We're in the Stanley Cup Final and we're down 3-0. You don't get a lot of these opportunities."

"Excuse us if today we're not real cheery. But tomorrow I can tell you we're going to show up."

For the fifth time in this playoff campaign, the Rangers are facing an elimination game. But unlike Game 7 against the Flyers, and Games 5 and 7 against the Penguins, the Rangers seem accepting of their fate.

"We believed that wasn't it for us," Marc Staal said of his team's mindset after falling behind the Penguins, 3-1. "We weren't going to lose the series that way. We knew we had better. Our focus was playing one solid game."

Even if the Rangers win in Game 4, history is not on their side. Only the 1942 Maple Leafs have come back from a 0-3 deficit in the Stanley Cup Final.

"I'm not going to lie to you," Brad Richards said. "It's pretty much impossible to be upbeat."

Type 1 Diabetes Study The PERL: Preventing Early Renal Loss in Diabetes

PERL is a research study sponsored by the National Institutes of Health and the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation. PERL is testing whether a medicine commonly used to treat gout may also help protect kidney function in people with type 1 diabetes.

You may be eligible for PERL if:

- You have had type 1 diabetes for at least 8 years,
